HELD UP AND ROBBED.

Robbed in daylight in front of Mount Royal station, Baltimore, of $90, with which to pay for an operation to be performed upon his elder brother, was the pathetic experience yesterday afternoon of Jerome Goad, 19 years old, of Roanoke, Va. The boy notified the police and gave descriptions of the two men whom he says held him up. He has also wired his father of his misadventure and is deeply distressed over his loss, fearing that his brother, who is in the Johns Hopkins Hospital, cannot be operated upon for lack of funds.

Young Goad told his story to Patrolman Noel, whom he found on Charles street, near Mount Royal avenue, shortly after he met with his mishap. He said that he had been counting a roll of bills when he heard two men approaching from the rear. Seeing him with the money, he says, one of them plied his arms to his side, while the other snatched the bills from him. They made off, one of them, he says, running down Cathedral street and the other running down Mount Royal avenue. The attack had been so sudden and unexpected that before the boy could recover from his surprise the men had made good their escape.

"I screamed for help," Goad told the patrolman, "as soon as one of the men threw his arms around me, for I knew they were after my money. No one was passing, and although I closed my hands over the bills, the taller of the two men twisted my arms so that I was compelled to open my hands. I looked about as they let go of me, but not a soul was in sight, and I then hurried down the street to find an officer."

Despite the quick work of the thieves, Goad was able to give an excellent description of the men, and, with the patrolman, hurried to the scene of the attack, but no trace of them could be found.

TRAGEDY IN FAIRFAX.

His brain is a whirl because of over-indulgence in hard cider, and maddened because he was contradicted on the merits and value of a horse, Joseph Trammell shot and killed his brother-in-law, Frank Peacock, in the latter's dining-room at Forestville, Fairfax county, yesterday afternoon. Trammell then surrendered.

Last night a coroner's inquest was held at Forestville, a hamlet about a mile and a half west of Great Falls. The jury held Trammell for the action of the grand jury, and he was turned over to Sheriff Allison, who took him to Fairfax. There the self-confessed slayer was lodged in a cell on a charge of homicide.

The shooting was witnessed by Peacock's wife and Jessie Trammell, brother of the slayer, who boarded in the house. Outside the dining-room, where the tragedy was enacted, Peacock's five children were playing. They rushed into the house when they heard the two reports of the shotgun.

At Trammell's solicitation, it is said, Peacock procured a jug of hard cider. The two then sat down at the dining table and began to imbibe. Each glass of the beverage served only to heat Trammell's brain the more, and it was not long before he assumed a dictatorial attitude and declared the horse owned by Peacock was a "nag."

The owner of the horse took exception to this remark. One word brought on another, until finally Trammell was told that he lied.

Trammell staggered up the steps to a room above the dining-room, and with his eyes flashing fire and a loaded double-barreled shotgun at his shoulder, rushed at his sister's husband.

Peacock, terrified at the sight of the gun in the hands of his intoxicated brother-in-law, sprang to his feet, shouted "For God sake, don't shoot!" and rushed toward Trammell to disarm him.

Trammell continued advancing toward Peacock, and before the latter or Mrs. Peacock or Jesse Trammell could reach the maddened man, he discharged both barrels of the weapon.

The two charges of buckshot struck Peacock in the center of the breast, and with an agonizing shriek of pain, he fell to the floor.

state, save national banks, to submit a report as to their financial condition.

This report, in reality, is a balance sheet of resources and liabilities, and must have reference to fiscal affairs up to September 23d. A similar report was called for about the middle of July.

These calls are made just after the comptroller of the currency makes a call on the national banks. The reports demanded by the commission are required to be filed within twenty days. Upon their receipt, they will be examined by Bertram Chesterton, the clerk who attends to this department of the commission's work, and it will be not shown to be satisfactory by the figures, further explanations will be asked.

The law provides a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000 for non-compliance with the law.
